Ranney Refrigerators Cut to Splinters

Only figuratively. You couldn't harm a Ranney in reality with anything less powerful than an ax. They're at the top—above all the refrigerators ever made. They are handsome enough to adorn any dining room. They are solid enough to last for years. They are scientific enough to save their price in the ice they save. They are going to be sold here cheap enough to make the dollars in your purse jump with anxiety to work in such a worthy cause as buying a real Ranney at its cost.

DR. MARY WALKER EJECTED.

The Famous Little Woman Gets Into Trouble at the Capitol.

Dr. Mary Walker was ejected from the ladies' gallery of the Senate yesterday afternoon.

Dr. Mary, who has strong anti-annexation predilections, has, from the beginning of the debate, lent to the anti the influence of her enthusiastic presence, sitting with unabated interest throughout the long, hot days of the one-sided debate.

Yesterday her exuberance, under the spell of Senator Roach's oratory, could be controlled no longer and, doubtless imagining for the moment that she was witnessing the final heat in a race between Uncle Sam and ex-Queen "Lili," in which the former was the loser, she sprang up and wildly waved her large man's handkerchief above her head.

This at once shocked the dignity of the few senators who were in their seats, and the sergeant-at-arms quickly dispatched a page to inform the doorkeeper of the ladies' gallery that the applause must cease.

The doorkeeper requested the doctor to be calm.

"I have a right to wave my handkerchief if I want to," she replied.

She was requested to leave the gallery, which she flatly refused to do. She was then escorted out, with her colors waving as high as she could reach above her head, and turned over to Detective Sinnott, who saw her safely out of the building and warned her that she would be arrested if she returned.

This is not the first time Dr. Walker has been the source of annoyance to the gallery guardians.

Last Friday she was sitting in the front row of the same gallery when a Pennsylvania agriculturist and his wife came in and took seats next to her. After sitting there a few minutes the gentleman went out to call on the Pennsylvania delegation, leaving his wife in the gallery.

Dr. Mary immediately struck up a conversation with the lady and pointed out the different senators, discussing their characteristics and reputations in a very frank manner. The doctor, however, had failed to inform her new acquaintance of her own identity. The lady from the Key Stone State very soon became highly indignant at the language of her informant, who, of course, she supposed was a man. The doctor then exposed the climax by giving her reasons why ladies still continued to wear dresses.

The Pennsylvania lady retired hastily to the corridors in tears and informed the doorkeeper that "that man" had insulted her.

Her husband came up at this moment and, on being informed by his wife what had been said, he was preparing to clean out the whole gallery. The doorkeeper, in the meantime, had been industriously trying to have the excited lady point out the guilty man. When at last she pointed "him" out and the doorkeeper explained that it was not a man at all, but Dr. Mary Walker, the husband of the distracted lady saw the joke and led his hysterical wife away with a peculiar smile on his face.

Vital Statistics.

An Insurance Policy Case.

The Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company of New York instituted a suit in equity yesterday for an interpleader against Edgar M. Kane and Howard K. Kane, surviving children of Moses M. Kane and Lucy Lettich Kane, his widow.

The action grows out of a proceeding in the Probate Court, in which the children accuse the widow of procuring from their father an assignment of his insurance policy by undue influence and fraud. The widow has demanded payment of the policy and the children have notified the company not to pay it, having their protest on the ground that their father was non compos mentis, and that the assignment is invalid.

No Jurisdiction.

In Equity Court No. 1 yesterday Justice Cox denied an injunction in the case of Clark against the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Insurance Company of New York. In sustaining the demurrer the judge rendered the important opinion "that the District courts have no jurisdiction over the internal management of a corporation 'foreign to the District.'"

Must Return the Goods.

Joseph Shearer, indicted for the larceny of a gold watch and chain from the person of Thomas Dolan, was found guilty yesterday in Criminal Court No. 2, before Judge Bradley. ## Another of Stoll's Daring Feats of Shoe-price Cutting!

There is a restless activity about this shoe house that makes brisk selling a positive necessity to its existence. Stagnation—the slow death of trade—has no place here, for its causes are absent. When trade is dull generally (as now, during the hot days) prices are made so low and opportunities are so taken advantage of that a vigorous buying on the people's part is compelled. Full well does Washington know that Stoll's shoe bargains are always genuine, always great. Take advantage of these prices before the 4th.
